9:45 - 11:15am The City's Role in Private Sector Job Quality
While inflation and the cost of living surge, and many states continue to maintain a minimum wage of $7.25 per hour, cities across the country are playing an increasing role in supporting working families. The importance of job quality - everything from wages to benefits, reliable scheduling, and paid family leave - is more critical than ever. This panel will look at the role of the city in boosting private sector job quality and highlight innovative approaches from mayors around the country.

11:30 - 1:00pm The Electric City: Transitioning to an EV Fleet
The United States is on the precipice of an electric vehicle revolution and cities have the opportunity to lead in this emerging sector. This panel will focus on best practices for transitioning our fleet to clean vehicles. We'll dig into both the current challenges, from availability to political feasibility, as well as opportunities, from federal funding to co-benefits for worker health and environmental justice. We're excited to discuss this once in a generation opportunity in Scranton, The Electric City.

9:30 - 11:00am Sunshine in the City: Fiscal Transparency & Community Trust
Engaging the community in the process of financial decision making and increasing transparency around how the city spends money can help build community trust, increase buy-in, and even boost your city's fiscal health. The historic influx of federal dollars to cities in recent years - along with a host of new tools and applications to help you engage, share, and report results - offers a great opportunity to cities looking to advance this work. This session will highlight best practices, benefits and challenges of increasing fiscal transparency and fiscal engagement.

Ensuring Tenant Protections & Rental Housing Quality

Renters in the United States tend to be Black, Hispanic, younger, and lower-income; they are faced with rising costs, deteriorating conditions, and a system that is designed to favor landlords and management companies over tenants. It is paramount that cities do everything in their power to even the playing field and ensure that renters in their community are guaranteed quality housing and treated fairly by landlords. While recognizing the reality of state preemption, this session will cover strategies to accomplish these goals, including requiring landlords to register with the city, implementing more robust inspection policies, forming a tenant bill of rights, offering pro bono legal assistance, and reducing blight in majority rental neighborhoods.

Moderator: Nikylan Knapper, Mayor · Maplewood, MO

Sarah Gallagher, Senior Project Director · National Low Income Housing Coalition

Jaime Kinder, Mayor · Meadville, PA

Eileen Cipriani, City Business Administrator · Scranton, PA
